A Virginia Ghost Story. The congregation of a colored Methodist church is much exercised at present over a ghost which is said to have made its appearance in their midst on a recent occasion. One of the deacons of the church a few months ago lost his wife, who had greatly shocked the religionists by her refusal to become one of them. The spectators held their on application.

Special formulas skilfully and accurately hind the man, who seemed entirely unconscious of it. He entered his pew breath, watching the gliding figure bewith the woman still behind him, seating herself when he did, but presently the stranger was seen to have disap-peared, though no one had seen her leave the church by the one door, and the windows were open top and bottom such short distances as to make it impossible for a grown person to have gone out at them, even if this feat could have been accomplished without any one seeing it.

The man looked back at the curious crowd, but did not seem to see his companion and when the minister, summoning up his courage, ventured to join him the foure disappeared.

That night the groaus of the deacon roused the other inmates of the house, and going to him he was found to be dying. All were positive that he was alone when they entered the room, which was confirmed by the doctor who was called to attend him, but that as the breath left his body the woman who had walked behind him was seen to leave the room. This is also confirmed by the decor
